1/1/14	LAW	At the request of a small group of nuns in Colorado, Justice Sotomayor issued a stay on the contraception mandate for Roman Catholic groups using the Christian Brothers Employee Benefit Trust health plan. Sotomayor's decision came on Tuesday night, just before the law would have gone into effect for the new year, and will temporarily block the mandate for these small subsets until a more permanent decision is made by the federal government on Friday. What is the significance behind Justice Sotomayor's decision? What expectations can healthcare providers and consumers have for the more permanent issuance to be handed down on Friday? Should the contraception mandate be universal, or should some groups be exempt? What's fair?	Lisa McElroy	14:-00
1/1/14	HEAL	You might be packing a bag for the gym or starting the first day of a juice cleanse -- it's the season for keeping New Year's resolutions, at least for now. But after days, weeks, or months of hard work, many people find themselves back where they started. What's the best way to approach a New Year's resolution? How can making the right kind of resolution or laying out a plan for following through change your life in the new year? We're talking about resolutions from start to finish -- call in at 866-893-5722 and tell us what you have planned for this year.	D.P. Waldman	17:00
1/1/14	ART	Award-winning documentary producer and director Morgan Neville wanted to give the limelight to an often unnoticed voice that has filled millions of American homes - the backup singer. In his new documentary, "Twenty Feet from Stardom," Neville featured the stories and voices of Darlene Love, Merry Clayton, Lisa Fischer, Tata Vega, and Judith Hill. You might not recognize their names, but you probably have heard their voices, singing on chart topping songs with Frank Sinatra, The Rolling Stones, Sting, Elton John and Stevie Wonder. "Twenty Feet from Stardom" explores the power of their voices and their stories of lost record deals as they worked to make ends meet. Perhaps "Twenty Feet from Stardom" even reminisces a different time in music, when background vocals subtly brought a broader dimension to the songs. Hill said that artists now often overdub their own voices on tracks instead of using background singers. Also on AirTalk, Patt asked Judith Hill about her experience stepping into a more solo role. Hill teased listeners with an a capella snippet of "Desperation" and talked about singing Michael Jackson's "The Way You Make Me Feel" on NBC's "The Voice." Hill said about her newfound fame, "In every chapter of your life, you enjoy it ... so never take any of it for granted. And I'm just blessed to be in this position, and I know it's also feast or famine because tomorrow I could be back in another place. So you just take it one day at a time and work hard."	Morgan Neville, Judith Hill	16:00
1/1/14	POLI	It's been a big year in the gay rights movement and two couples here in California stepped into the spotlight to make history. Back in 2009 when Paul Katami and Jeff Zarrillo joined Sandy Stier and Kris Perry in 2009 to challenge the constitutionality of Proposition 8 they became the face of the fight for marriage equality in California and across the nation. It took four years of legal back and forth but the couples fighting against Prop 8 finally won in June when the Supreme Court declared the law unconstitutional. Two days later, Katami and Zarrillo rushed to city hall to be married by then-Mayor Antonio Villaraigosa. The two couples became the face of a movement and - together with a formidable legal team - brought down Prop 8 putting them at the top of the list for Californians of the Year!	Paul Katami, Jeff Zarrillo	20:00

1/1/14	SPOR	In May, San Antonio Spurs coach Gregg Popovich caught up to one of former Lakers coach Phil Jackson's incredible records. Popovich tied Jackson for the most best-of-7 series sweeps in NBA history. Does Jackson ever feel tempted to return to the sidelines to keep his stats up? He says he has no plans to return, but rumors continue to fly about various cities trying to tempt him, especially because of how close he came to returning to the Lakers at the start of the season. Jackson served as head coach of the L.A. Lakers from 2000 to 2010, winning five NBA titles for the franchise. He was head coach of the Chicago Bulls from 1989 to 1998, winning six NBA titles. Jackson also played professional basketball for the NBA championship-winning New York Knicks. In his memoir, "Eleven Rings," the former Lakers coach talks about the love and spirituality that won all those games, swept all those series and scored all those rings.	Phil Jackson	27:00

1/2/14	LAW	Guillermo Cespedes, director of Los Angeles' Office of Gang Reduction and Youth Development, will leave his job on Thursday for a new position with Creative Associates International, an organization that works to reduce violence and improve education programs in Central America. For the past four years, Cespedes fought gang violence in L.A. with innovative programs that included using ex-cons to convince gangsters and wannabes to take another path. The strategy has contributed to an historic drop in crime. Guest host Frank Stoltze talks with Cespedes about his tenure, and UCLA professor Jorja Leap about the future of the city's anti-gang efforts post-Cespedes.	Guillermo Cespedes, Jorja Leap, Joe Buscaino	31:00:00
1/2/14	SPOR	One racing champion Michael Schumacher is still comatose after a skiing accident in the French Alps last Sunday. Although he was wearing a helmet and reportedly didn't take great risks on the slopes, he hit his head on a rock and suffered a brain injury. The seven-time world champion in F1 racing is no stranger to risk. His other hobbies including skydiving, speed bikes, and horseback riding. "What I love with those things is finding the limit, being on the limit and still controlling it. Just to find this fine edge is something I have always liked," he said in an interview last year. What's your risky sport of choice? How does danger factor into your fun? How do you measure risk? And how much enjoyment do you get from being scared?	Dr. Christopher Van Tilburg	16:00

1/2/14	ECON	The online retailer Zappos is making a major change to their company's management - they're getting rid of them all together. The company's CEO Tony Hsieh (pron: SHAY) has announced a radical 'self-governing' operating system where there will be no more managers, job titles, or hierarchy. The system, dubbed a "holacracy", still has some kinks to work out but Hsieh hopes their innovative approach will help the company thrive into the future. Zappos isn't the first company to try this type of management-free structure and more will likely follow. But can a 'holacracy' work? Can you imagine your workplace without a manager? Would anyone get anything done? Would you be more motivated to be productive? What alternative office structures have been the most effective?	Aimee Groth, Ethan Bernstein	22:00
1/2/14	YOUT	Personal health tracking is on the rise. Adults use devices like Fitbit and Jawbone to measure every aspect of their lives, from heart rate and breathing to the number of steps taken, and how deeply they sleep. But can similar devices designed to monitor babies help parents understand their children better? Companies like Mimo and Sprouting are introducing more extreme baby monitors – technology attached to onesies or designed to wrap around a baby's ankle to tell parents whether their child is breathing, running a temperature, is flipped on their back or stomach, and more. Options for baby monitoring have moved far beyond the simple audio monitor in a child's room, but how much tracking is necessary to understand your child? What are the benefits of more evaluative monitors, and how can parents use them most effectively? Are there any drawbacks to relying on these kinds of devices? Which populations need them most?	Dulcie Madden, Dr. Tanya Altmann	26:00:00

1/3/14	ECON	The ubiquitous photo app Instagram was bought by Facebook for $1 billion back in 2012. Yahoo bought Tumblr, the popular social network, for $1 billion in 2014. It's only three days into the new year and already we have a new tech entrant into the $1 billion acquisition club. The company is Mandiant. Who?, you ask. Mandiant is the Virginia-based cybersecurity firm that rose to fame last year when it pinpointed the location of an elite Chinese military unit of hackers that was allegedly involved in hacking U.S. companies. FireEye, a tech company in the Silicon Valley, is the buyer. The generous price tag signals the importance of cybersecurity in our hyper-connected world, but the Mandiant sale isn't the first major M&A deal in the industry.	Anurag Rana	13:00

1/3/14	POLI	When he ran for City Attorney last year, Mike Feuer promised to make Los Angeles a safer place. His vision included creating a gun violence prevention unit and expanding the Neighborhood Prosecutor Program created by former City Attorney Rocky Delgado. Guest host speaks with Feuer six months after he was elected as Los Angeles' newest City Attorney on the progress he's made on both fronts. Also, they'll be discussing the enforcement of the voter-approved Measure D, which caps the number of medical marijuana dispensaries in the City of Los Angeles to 135. Thus far, Feuer's office has filed more than 65 criminal cases against dispensary operators and owners.	Mike Feuer	18:00
1/3/14	HEAL	Americans typically pick going on a diet as their New Year's resolution but many don't make it past the end of January. If you're having trouble swearing off the chocolate cake or large sodas, could an addiction to sugar be the culprit? Science is still split on whether or not people can become clinically addicted to food the same way they can to drugs like cocaine or alcohol. Research shows that humans have a strong reaction to sugar, fats and food additives but is there a difference between a serious love of junk food and an actual addiction? Research shows that eating foods heavy on the sugar and fat light up the same receptors in the brain that affect drug addicts. Last year, the director of the National Institute on Drug Abuse spoke publicly about the commonalities between food and drug addictions. Despite that endorsement, food addiction still has not made it into the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual-V, the influential list of recognized disorders written by the American Psychiatric Association. What does the current research say about food addictions? Is the brain's dopamine response to food more similar to other non-physical addictions such as love and attraction or to chemical drugs? Have you experienced addiction symptoms when it comes to food?	Robert Lustig, MD, Barry Levin, MD	15:00

1/3/14	ENT	Trailers for the Golden Globes and the Oscars have been floating around the internet, circulating on social media, and sneaking in some screen time in preparation for awards show season. The shows have always been hyped up, but in recent years, the announcement of who will host the shows, contracts for years in advance, and trailers for the big events have become a more important part of attracting viewers. While ratings for the shows fluctuate and producers attempt to capture audience interest, some show have proven adaptable and others have floundered. The Tony Awards, for example, have been praised by critics as increasingly entertaining, while the Academy Awards have struggled to find reliably funny hosts. How far in advance do we want to see Ellen psyching people up for the Oscars? How long should Tina Fey and Amy Poehler be locked into the globes? Are these multi-platform advertising efforts truly engaging and effective?	Barry Adelman, Tom O'Neil	16:00

1/6/14	LAW	The Supreme Court on Monday stepped in to block more same-sex marriages from being performed in Utah while state officials appeal a decision allowing the unions. It's the latest in a series of back and forth decisions that has allowed, then retracted, same-sex marriage rights in the state. Utah's path to legalizing same-sex marriage is starting to look very similar to the drawn out legal battle over California's marriage rights that ultimately went to the Supreme Court. As more and more states become embroiled in legislative action over same-sex marriage, at what point should the federal government step in? Would a federal decision on same-sex marriage relieve a lot of uncertainty and turmoil over the patchwork of state laws? Or would that strip necessary rights from individual states? Where is the tipping point? Will we be left with a split nation where half of the states allow same-sex marriage and the others don't? How will that work when couples move across state lines? 1/6/14	LAW	Conservative billionaires Charles and David Koch have built an unprecedented massive political network that shields the identities of donors, according to a report conducted by The Washington Post with help from the Center for Responsive Politics. The Post's analysis of new tax returns and other documents found that the Koch brothers' coalition raised more than $407 million for the 2012 campaign—using a network of tax-exempt groups and limited liability companies. With monikers like SLAH LLC and ORRA LLC, the groups have raised major funds to advance limited-government policies—outpacing other independent groups on the right and at least matching the contributions of labor unions on the left. Late last year, the IRS launched an effort to rein in the use of tax-exempt groups in political campaigning. What rights should the Kochs and others have to infuse money into politics without disclosure? Should the Kochs be more accountable for how they're using their money and power? If two men can hold this much power, what does that say about the U.S. political system?	Matea Gold	8:00

1/6/14	HOUS	Frustration has characterized the experience of many aspirant homebuyers in Southern California. Despite the stabilization of housing prices in Los Angeles and Orange counties in the last few months, low inventory and bidding wars are still the rules of the game. There are new rules and possible tax expirations in 2014 that could impact the housing market this year. With Spring homebuying season just around the corner, we've invited two experts to talk about their predictions for the housing market this year. Would we see more houses hitting the market? Would prices go up? If you are in the market for a home, what could you do to improve your chances?	:David Krohn, Chris Thornberg,	15:00
1/6/14	HEAL	New results released from the Oregon Health Insurance Experiment, a study of people who randomly received healthcare coverage via lottery in 2008, has put into question the Obama administration's assertion that expanded Medicaid would lower emergency room visits. The study, which is considered to be a gold-standard for its incorporation of a large random sample, shows that there is an almost 40 percent relative increase in emergency room use for those newly receiving expanded Medicaid. California, which has already experimented with expanded coverage, witnessed a similar bump in usage, but also featured a modest decline after a period. Will California's case be a model for the country? Will emergency rooms be able to handle a surge resulting from expanded Medicaid? Will the study weaken the Obama administration's credibility in regards to claims about the already-troubled healthcare system? Or are these simply the growing pains of the ACA? Official recommendations in the US are that pregnant women should abstain from alcohol since no amount has proven to be safe. But is that really true? A new study is adding to the evidence that some light drinking in pregnancy might not actually be harmful.
