10/15/12	POLI	With just three weeks until Election Day, there is little the Obama and Romney campaigns can agree on. But united they stand on the role of CNN's Candy Crowley when she moderates tomorrow night's town hall debate. Time magazine reports that both campaigns have complained to the Commission on Presidential Debates about comments Crowley made regarding her role as the moderator. She said on CNN last week, "Once the table is kind of set by the town hall questioner, there is then time for me to say, Hey, wait a second, what about X, Y and Z?" However, an agreement formed on October 3 between lawyers for both campaigns stated the moderator would "not ask follow-up questions or comment on either the questions...or the answers...or otherwise intervene [other than enforcing time limits and prompting the candidates to respond]." It's important to note that Crowley was not included in forming this agreement nor signing it. So is she beholden to it? How worried are the campaigns really? This morning NPR's David Folkenflik called it "preplanning" (preemptively complaining) and suggested that perceived bias can help spin the debate reviews.	David Folkenflik	20:00

10/15/12	SCI	The Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences said that Lloyd Shapley's work has sparked a "flourishing field of research" and has awarded him this year's Nobel economics prize. Shapley, 89, is a professor emeritus at UCLA and has been at the university since 1981. He is being rewarded for his work in matching theory and its practical applications in markets, for example, how job seekers are matched with employers or how patients find donors of human organs. "For example, students have to be matched with schools, and donors of human organs with patients in need of a transplant," the academy said. "How can such matching be accomplished as efficiently as possible? What methods are beneficial to what groups?" Shapley used game theory to research different matching systems and to answer how one method may systematically benefit one agent or another in markets. Though it is not technically a Nobel Prize because it wasn't established in the will of Alfred Nobel, winners are awarded 8 million Swedish kronor, or about $1.2 million. Alvin Roth, a Stanford University professor was also awarded in this category.	Matt DeBord	5:00
10/15/12	POLI	The race for California's newly-drawn 30th congressional district is shaping up to be one of the most contentious — and expensive — in the country. Democratic incumbents Brad Sherman and Howard Berman, who represent the 27th and 28th districts respectively, were thrown into the ring together thanks to redistricting and California's "top two" primary system. The new district is made up half from Sherman's old district and a quarter from Berman's; the remaining 25 percent comes from the old 30th district. The two candidates, both Jewish, have similar voting records but differ on issues such as the economy, immigration and higher education. In the long and heated race, both candidates have taken figurative swings at each other — Sherman accused Berman of overpaying his brother for political consulting, while Berman charged Sherman with profiting from interest charged to his own campaign accounts. But last week, in a debate held at Pierce College, things literally got physical. After Berman accused his opponent of being, "either delusional or a liar," Sherman approached Berman, put an arm around him and shouted, "You wanna get into this?" while a police guard hovered nearby. The incident captured national attention after a video was released by Berman's campaign. Both candidates later released official statements expressing regret over their actions, characterizing the race as "emotional." Berman and Sherman addressed the issue on AirTalk: Sherman's statement: "As you know I think that the voters are entitled to a dignified discussion of the issues. When you go to a 60-minute debate you deserve 60 minutes of dignified discussion. And for one minute it certainly wasn't dignified and the voters deserve better than that."	Howard Berman, Brad Sherman	23:59

10/15/12	LAW	"John" is the name often given to anonymous male customers of prostitutes, but many law enforcement agencies across the U.S. are beginning to reveal these patrons' real names in an effort to curb criminal prostitution. A majority of police officers maintain that outing and shaming those who pay for sex to be the most effective method for cracking down on the illegal act, according to survey data. Fresno, California, hosts a website called "Operation Reveal" that exhibits mug shots of suspected 'Johns,' while Oklahoma City has "JohnTV," and in Arlington Texas, photos of suspects are literally plastered on highway billboards. "Overall, about 60 percent of the communities that arrest the johns to begin with, in some way, release their identities," said Michael Shively, a lead researcher to the study. "It's only a subset of all those communities that are really doing it in an aggressive manner and with the specific intent of trying to either punish more severely, or to deter others from trying to buy sex." Shivley adds that some communities release identities as part of routine processing, while others take on a more aggressive approach. These efforts do not go without criticism, as some say publicly humiliating possibly innocent suspects before they are given a fair trial could be particularly damaging to their well-being and inflict serious psychological harm to innocent family members. Shivley says that while there's no statistical evidence that shaming is effective, he says there is indirect evidence saying that it can work	Michael Shively	24:00:00
10/15/12	LAW	U.S Supreme Court Chief Justice John Roberts stunned the nation when he voted to uphold the Obama administration's health care plan in an atypical decision announced on June 28, 2012. Roberts' vote marked another chapter in the often complicated and contentious relationship between Chief Justice Roberts and President Obama that began the day Roberts fumbled the oath of office at Obama's inauguration. As a result of the 5-4 conservative majority Court led by Roberts and the slightly more liberal White House led by Obama, two influential branches of federal government – the judicial and the executive – have often found themselves in opposition over the last four years. Author Jeffrey Toobin has documented the momentous ideological battle between the conservative Supreme Court and the Obama administration in "The Oath: The Obama White House and the Supreme Court," including Obama's criticism of the Court's controversial ruling in the Citizens United case. Toobin provides a thorough account of the dynamic relationship between the two intrinsically different divisions and their leaders that will likely resonate for decades to come.	Jeffrey Toobin	17:00

10/16/12	IMM	Los Angeles City Council met this morning to discuss two controversial issues. One is a proposal introduced by councilmember Richard Alarcon to a Universal City Services Card – a hybrid of ID card, library card and debit card – for those who don't have a drivers' license or bank account. Mayor Villaraigosa is championing the card to help undocumented residents access city services and reduce dependency on cash and payday lenders.  Opponents fear it will make it easier for illegal immigrants to violate immigration laws. They'll also be voting to review proposed new city laws regarding digital billboards. Local residents have complained about glare and distraction caused by flashing advertising displays, but the city is considering loosening restrictions on the billboards, possibly with the benefit of a revenue-sharing deal with CBS Outdoor and Clearchannel. And there's more political intrigue in the tiny community of Eagle Rock.  The city's charter allows for "stakeholders" to vote along with residents in elections for Neighborhood Council. That means, anyone who does business – whether it's shopping at Trader Joe's or buying a cup of coffee – can cast a vote. Over the weekend, the city was inundated with voters from as far as Ventura County, who had been solicited by council candidates favorable to allowing medical marijuana shops in the area. According to the city's tally, more than 300 of the 800 votes cast were by "at-large"	Alice Walton, Raphael Sonenshein, Frank Stoltze	23:49

10/16/12	POLI	Tonight at Hofstra University on Long Island, N.Y. Mitt Romney will try to keep his momentum going while President Barack Obama will do his best to mount a comeback after a disappointing performance two weeks ago in Denver. There is pressure on Obama to show more fight, but not necessarily to appear combative with his re-election on the line. In this, their second face-off, eyes will also be on moderator Candy Crowley as she has hinted at wanting to play an active role at the event. The election is 21 days away, how much is stake for the candidates tonight? Who gets the edge with Candy Crowley vowing to be more active than Jim Lehrer was in round one? Are voters expecting President Obama to be more aggressive, or are debates not his strong suit?	Ginger Gibson	7:00
10/16/12	POLI	While both the backers and opponents of Proposition 35 agree on the problem, they are at odds over how to deal with the crime and punishment of human trafficking in California. The ballot initiative would increase prison terms and fines for the sexual exploitation of vulnerable women and men. "Our current law has gaping holes through which our children are falling into the hands of the traffickers that are there to catch them because our response is ineffective," said Sharmin Bock, Assistant District Attorney of Alameda County and co-author of Prop 35. "But our law doesn't reflect the reality of how these kids are today in fact sold not just on the street but on the internet." Victims' advocates complain Prop 35 is wrong to have shorter prison sentences for labor traffickers (12 years) than sex traffickers (20 years), because most victims fall under the former. Kathleen Kim, Professor of Law at Loyola Law School and co-author of AB 22, California's current human trafficking law, is against Prop 35 because she believes it doesn't go far enough to protect funds for victims. "Proposition 35 is undoubtedly well intentioned, however it takes a predominantly criminal enforcement approach without attendant broadening of victims' rights and access to relief," said Kim on AirTalk. "That's my primary objection, because it takes a predominantly criminal enforcement approach, it creates some unintended consequences on the actual survivors of human trafficking."	Sharmin Bock, Kathleen Kim	17:00

10/16/12	HEAL	According to the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, 50.9 percent of Americans drink regularly, which the agency chalks up as having more than twelve drinks per year. The CDC also says that an average of more than one drink a day for a woman qualifies as "heavy drinking." In modern American society, it is common practice for millions of us to return home from work and pop a bottle of wine or crack open a beer. Nearly all our social events have an aspect of imbibing... eggnog at Christmas, champagne at midnight on New Year's Eve, wine as a housewarming gift and endless pints of beer at birthday parties and sporting events. Americans love to both drown their sorrows and celebrate their joys with a drink or two. But what happens in social situations when someone doesn't drink at all, or another person drinks significantly more on a regular basis? Mismatched social norms when it comes to alcohol can lead to relationship strife, and it works both ways. Ever go out with a friend who doesn't drink at all... or another who has far more than one too many? How does it make you feel? It seems that somewhere between actual 'moderation' and "everything in moderation, including moderation" is a blurry line that marks 'too much' for a given individual in a social setting or relationship.	Adi Jaffe	17:00
10/16/12	ART	The death toll of the American Civil War, estimated at well over half a million, was unprecedented. A major new exhibition drawn from archives at The Huntington Library, in recognition of the 150-year anniversary of the conflict, explores how the nation came to terms with the devastation. The evocative compilation of historical images, called, "A Strange and Fearful Interest," is named after a statement made by Oliver Holmes in 1863. He said, "The field of photography is extending itself to embrace subjects of strange and sometimes of fearful interest." Highlights of the visual presentation include Alexander Gardner's views of battlefield dead at Antietam, rare photographs from Andrew J. Russell's "U.S. Military Railroad Album," George Bernard's incomparable album "Photographic Views of Sherman's Campaign (1866)" and more. "A Strange and Fearful Interest: Death, Mourning, and Memory in the American Civil War" is curated by Jennifer Watts and will be on display from October 13, 2012 until January 14, 2013.	Jennifer A. 10/17/12	POLI	Round one of the series of presidential debates went to Mitt Romney, with President Barack Obama delivering a lackluster and disappointing performance. But the general consensus on last night's rematch is that both candidates were on their game.  The setting, a town hall style forum at Hofstra University in Long Island, New York, was in a state generally dominated by the Democratic Party, which certainly didn't hurt the president's case. Questions came from the audience of undecided voters and covered a variety of issues including energy independence, job creation, pay equity for women, foreign policy and of course, the economy. This gave each candidate the opportunity to spin off into their favorite talking points.	Eugene Kiely, Frank Newport	21:44
10/17/12	LAW	One of the most heated contests in this November's election is between two prominent Californians who aren't running for anything. Governor Jerry Brown and civil rights lawyer Molly Munger have been out stumping for competing tax proposals, both aimed at giving a financial leg up to California's struggling schools.  Brown's Proposition 30 asks wealthier taxpayers to pay 1 to 3 percent more in income tax for the next seven years and imposes a modest quarter-percent increase in sales tax for the next four years. Munger's Prop 38 also increases income taxes, but on a sliding scale across all income levels and for the next 12 years.  Prop 38 funds will be allocated to K-12 schools and early childhood programs, with a portion going to pay down state debt. Anticipated revenues for both plans range from $6 billion annually (Prop 30) to $10 billion+ (Prop 38). Both campaigns have been on the offensive, with Prop 38 ads implying that Prop 30 money will end up in the hands of Sacramento politicians, and Prop 30 backers saying their opponents stand to sink both ships unnecessarily. They're very tasty, but are they legal? Right now, street vendors can be fined up to $1,000 and face jail time for selling food on L.A. sidewalks. The carts are generally operated by immigrant vendors who make a living selling quick late-night snacks to concert, club and bar-goers. Los Angeles County's Street Vending Compliance Program does require vendors to pay fees and get public health permits, but they are still not permitted to prepare or sell the food on sidewalks. With the help of City Councilman Jose Huizar, street vendors in Boyle Heights recently came to an agreement with the city to be allowed to sell food at the Boyle Heights Farmers Market once a week. The East Los Angeles Community Corporation (ELACC) in Boyle Heights is organizing a series of forums and working with community members to try and garner support for the legalization of street vendors.	Isela Gracian, Leron Gubler, Khaled Hassan	24:00:00
10/17/12	EDU	Now that we've debated Propositions 30 and 38, a pair of competing tax initiatives that would restructure the way California's tax structure pays for its education system, let's take a step back and examine the common link between both initiatives. Governor Jerry Brown's plan to pay for education in the Golden state is Prop 30, which features an incremental sales and personal income tax increase. Pasadena attorney Molly Munger has been stumping for the California PTA supported Prop 38, which would use a sliding scale income tax increase to raise more funding for the state's struggling schools. But California voters will likely note what both plans have in common: a tax increase. Organizations like the Howard Jarvis Taxpayers Association stand in opposition to both initiatives because of that commonality and the belief that higher taxes would imperil California's economic climate. Is this hard-line no-new-taxes stance a viable path forward for funding California's schools? Where can lawmakers turn to find enough places to cut spending and close loopholes to balance the budget and pay for education?	David Spady	16:00
10/17/12	POLI	Two major points of contention during last night's presidential debate were the divergence between the two opponents' tax policies and plans to increase employment. Some experts criticize President Barack Obama for exaggerating the benefits of taxing the wealthy, while others say Mitt Romney's numbers simply do not add up. In the debate and throughout his campaign, Obama has emphasized the importance making sure wealthy Americans pay their fare share in taxes. What he doesn't seem to mention is that even if all Americans in the highest income bracket pay significantly more in taxes, it would only be a small drop in the bucket toward paying down the nation's towering deficit. Meanwhile, Romney has proposed to cut taxes for all Americans, including the wealthy, but has not provided a detailed account of how to fill the gap left by the major loss in tax revenue that would occur under his plan. The candidates have also expressed very different views on how to create more jobs. Obama seems poised to focus on fostering employment in newer and greener industries, while Romney supports increasing jobs in more traditional industries such as domestic oil production. Which plan has the most holes in it? What more can be done to solve America's financial difficulties for the long-term?	Michael Ettlinger, Curtis Dubay	16:00

10/18/12	POLI	As he campaigns for reelection, President Barack Obama is playing hardball with the GOP. The president is prepared to veto legislation aimed at stopping year-end tax hikes and spending cuts, which are collectively known as the 'fiscal cliff,' unless Republicans agree to raise tax rates for the wealthy, according to administration officials.  Some Republicans are skeptical that Obama will actually follow through with the veto in light of the fact that he has backed off demands for higher taxes twice in the past. If Obama does not cooperate to pass the legislation, taxes rates for nearly 90 percent of households would rise, military and domestic budgets would be deeply cut, and this might spark a brief recession.  Is Obama bluffing or is he potentially putting the economy at risk? How can Democrats and Republicans reach a bipartisan compromise on tax legislation without financially hurting taxpayers? 10/18/12	LAW	Los Angeles County Sheriff Lee Baca met with the Board of Supervisors on Tuesday to discuss their 63 proposed measures for jail reforms. Still, he clashed with the board – Chairman Zev Yaroslavsky argued that the Board of Supervisors should select the new inspector general. Sheriff Baca is under mounting political pressure to reform L.A. County jails, and the board has put in place a compliance monitor to track his progress. Baca says he will begin to implement the new reforms, with or without crucial funding, and that a new force policy will be released in January.	Lee Baca, Frank Stoltze	17:00
10/18/12	LAW	Currently, companies conducting business in California can potentially increase profits by keeping their headquarters outside of the Golden State. By remaining out-of-state, corporations such as General Motors, International Paper, Kimberly-Clark, and Chrysler are able to avoid paying California taxes on their income. This trend or loophole has arguably cost the state of California over $1 billion annually in lost tax revenue. A new proposition on this November's ballot is designed to make up for this loss. If passed, Proposition 39, an "Income Tax Increase for Multistate Businesses Initiative," would require out-of-state businesses to pay taxes on income made in California and earmark those tax dollars to pay for state projects that "create energy efficiency and clean energy jobs." Those in favor of Prop. 39 say that the current loophole encourages companies to send jobs out of state. Opponents say a tax increase would give companies another reason to not invest or hire. New Jersey, Illinois, and Texas have similar laws already, but does that mean that it is appropriate for California to tax out-of-state businesses? How would this measure impact California's business	Senator Kevin DeLeon, Mike Spenc	17:00
10/18/12	ECON	Some blockbuster housing numbers were released yesterday, raising the happy possibility that a housing recovery is finally on its way. Are we seeing a bit of a pricing frenzy at the entry-level due to shortage? If so, might it be better to wait for more normalizing in prices? Or is this still a great time to buy?	Stuart Gabriel, Matt DuBord	17:00
10/18/12	FOR	Now in its 18th month, Syria's ongoing civil war between the regime of ruling President Bashar Assad and rebel forces fighting to end nearly five decades of Assad's Ba'ath Party rule has claimed thousands of lives and created a humanitarian crisis. While the world watches the bloodshed and governments criticize each other for getting involved or turning a blind eye to daily atrocities, a group called the Syrian American Medical Society is taking risks of its own to provide medical care to wounded Syrian citizens in the war zone. Syrian-American Doctors like pulmonary specialist Zaher Sahloul from Chicago have traveled to the region and made multiple clandestine trips across the Syrian border from Turkey to reach field hospitals and treat the many wounded. The journeys are perilous and have found these volunteer doctors sneaking through holes in barbed wire fences and dodging border guards. Once there, these doctors treat hundreds of casualties under the constant threat of attacks by Syrian military artillery and airstrikes. Syria's health care system, once one of the best in the Middle East, is now in shambles and the thousands of refugees that have poured into neighboring Turkey has overwhelmed that country's medical infrastructure. 10/18/12	TECH	Two weeks ago, the first Presidential debate generated a record 10 million tweets. The second debate scored over 7 million tweets, a large portion of them mentioning Mitt Romney's 'binder full of women'. People following on Twitter don't have to wait for the debates to be over before finding out who wins. Twitter wants to be a companion for everything you watch on television. The site is making moves to be more accessible to those who don't even have accounts.  With Twitter turning out these kinds of numbers it begs the question: what's next for the social media giant? 10/19/12	LAW	Lately the Boy Scouts of America has been having to put out more fires than it's been building. The latest media blaze for the over 100-year-old institution is the release of the Boy Scouts Ineligible Volunteer Files. The files, over 14,500 pages of previously confidential materials containing allegations against thousands of volunteers over many decades, were published as part of a $20 million civil suit against the Scouts on behalf of sexual abuse victims. This development is the latest in a string of concerns surrounding the institution and its management following debate about unfriendly policies towards LGBT members and volunteers and court battles over the BSA's failure to protect scouts who had been sexually abused. The BSA's website espouses its mission of building character, training young people in citizenship and promoting personal fitness, and for generations of boys, those values have held true. How will these controversies change the perception of an organization that has established such a prominent place in American culture? How can the Boy Scouts adapt and move forward? 10/19/12	HEAL	Statistics show that women who get pregnant over the age of 35 face increased risk of complications, but these statistics are at odds with a growing number of American women who decide to wait to start their families. There are many reasons for women to choose putting off having a baby: Americans are living longer, women are making different career choices that mean they may be reluctant to be sidelined with a pregnancy while climbing the company ladder, or maybe they opted to wait longer to marry and start a traditional family. Whatever the case, technology has facilitated these important life choices. The freezing of eggs is one controversial infertility practice that is becoming so commonplace that the American Society of Reproductive Medicine will announce Monday that the technique should no longer be considered "experimental." The change in position was prompted by a report that reviewed 1,000 published studies about egg freezing and determined that developing technology has made the procedure safe and more effective. But not everyone is heralding this change. Some women's health advocacy critics cite that the studies were based on pregnancies rather than healthy births and that more study is necessary. Researchers crunched data from the Wisconsin Longitudinal Study, a survey of over 10,000 men and women who graduated from Wisconsin high school in 1957.  Back in 1957, the students were asked to list three people they considered to be their best friends. Those students, whose names were written down the most, were deemed the most popular. Decades later, the researchers have followed up with them to see what they could learn about the impact of popularity then and now. Turns out, those popular kids were more likely to have come from "warm family environments," to have been smarter than their peers and to have been somewhat more affluent.  Today, those same people are earning two percent more than their peers.	Sarah Kliff	8:00

10/25/12	HEAL	The California Fourth District Court overturned their 2010 conviction of San Diego medical marijuana provider Jovan Jackson, recognizing the right of nonprofit dispensaries to provide medical cannabis to those with prescriptions.  The decision coincides with the repeal of a ban on Los Angeles dispensaries, which began in July. Medical marijuana advocates acted quickly to collect enough signatures to put a repeal referendum on the March 2013 ballot, but L.A. Council members decided to repeal the bill themselves in a more recent vote. 10/25/12	POLI	Can't wait until election day to find out how people feel about California Propositions and ballot initiatives? No problem. There are two new surveys out today from USC and the Public Policy Institute of California. The latest polling on California's ballot measures indicates waning support for Propositions 31, 32, and 38 and an increasingly level split on Governor Jerry Brown's educational funding measure, Proposition 30. Prop 31, a two year budget program, has been consistently unpopular. Support for Prop. 32, which would prohibit unions, corporations, and government contractors from using payroll deductions for political purposes, has dropped off since September. Molly Munger's tax measure to fund education, Prop. 38, has also lost ground, despite a funding push.	Mark Baldassare, Dave Kanevsky	17:00

With the offseason acquisitions of two time MVP Steve Nash and the best center in the game Dwight Howard, Kobe and the Lakers are considered the team to beat in the Western Conference. The Lakers also reached a 20 year, $3 billion deal with Time Warner Cable last year for broadcasting rights to over 70 Laker games a year. New team, new broadcasting deal, everyone should be happy in Laker-land. That is to say everyone except the fans. Despite the new agreement, Time Warner has yet to strike a deal with local cable and satellite providers to broadcast actual games.	Andrew Zimbalist, Amy Maclean	23:00
10/25/12	POLI	In 2008, Barack Obama won handily Nevada's then-five electoral votes by a margin of over 120,000 votes. Fast forward to 2012 and the incumbent Democrat president is leading by a slimmer margin for Nevada's six electoral votes – currently averaging a roughly three and a half point lead. But Republican challenger Mitt Romney has been making important inroads in the Silver State, hinging on Nevada's staunchly conservative rural areas – and a lot of Nevada is very sparsely populated – as well as the state's small but vocal Mormon population.	Steve Sebelius	8:00
10/25/12	EDU	The free speech debate rages on: College is where you go to expand your mind, right? At least, that's what the free speech revolution of the sixties taught us. But in the years since those heady days of sit-ins, protests and flag-burnings, barriers to that basic right have been creeping up at campuses all over the country. Indeed, a series of isolated incidents, taken as a whole, might point to an all-out assault on the principal of free speech: a theater professor disciplined for posting a TV show poster on his door. Students at Yale banned from putting an F. Scott Fitzgerald quote on a T-shirt. "Free speech zones" enforced on campuses. Even at the bastion of the free speech movement, the University of California at Berkeley, officials have recommended a "no hate speech" policy that some say borders on censorship. Should institutions of higher learning be policing extreme religious views, hate speech and unpopular politics? Are we sending students the wrong message about speaking their minds? Could a culture of censorship in America's colleges and universities bleed into rest of society?	Greg Lukianoff	16:00

Surely most of the audience knew it was a drama – it was clearly labeled so at several points in the one-hour show – but nevertheless there was some level of understandable panic in parts of the country. And it surely touched a nerve in the rest of the listeners. It does so even now. Hearing Welles and his fellow actors describe leveled buildings and cities, images of Hiroshima or 9/11 come to mind pretty easily. 10/31/12	DIS	Superstorm Sandy is on the move, leaving a wake of destruction along the East Coast. Some blame the extent of Sandy's devastation on the craziness of a Frankenstorm, but climate experts say the root cause is climate change – storms like Sandy are predictable, they argue.  Warmer seas and increasingly tumultuous weather patterns have become the norm in recent years. Indeed, scientists did predict that New York City would be hit by a major storm. So why are we still unprepared when disaster strikes?	Molly Peterson, Robert Puentes, Adam Rose	22:00

10/31/12		For over thirty years, the People's Republic of China (PRC) has enforced a controversial family planning policy also known as the one-child policy. But that rule may soon be changed to a two-child policy as a result of a new report from a PRC-affiliated research group.  The China Development Research Foundation has recommended that the policy should be amended to allow two children per family by 2015 and that all birth limits should be dropped by 2020. The think tank points to China's plunging birth rate and multitude of demographic imbalances as a sign that the one-child policy has outlived its usefulness. 11/1/12		As election day approaches and the race between President Obama and Mitt Romney tightens in crucial swing states, a flurry of media attention is focused on the wild, if unlikely ways that the race might stray from the norm. This swirl of what ifs are fueled by extremes: could if superstorm Sandy delays the election? How will people in storm-stricken areas vote? And by reflections on the past: what if the race is so close it needs a recount? What happens if there's a tie in the Electoral College? What will happen if it ends up in the Supreme Court, like Bush v. Gore? While it's nearly impossible that the election would be postponed beyond November 6, the storm and recovery on the East Coast post-Sandy may still impact the race. With key electorates still inconvenienced by the weather, states like Pennsylvania, the Carolinas, and Virginia may demonstrate the storm's influence when it comes time to vote. In the much discussed event of a tie? Pollsters and newspapers agree that this is improbable, but it hasn't stopped rampant speculation about the ways that a tie in the Electoral College could lead to a Romney/Biden administration, or an even more unlikely Biden presidency. Should the election be postponed? 11/1/12		The race for the White House couldn't be much closer and with 29 electoral votes at stake, Florida is the biggest of all of the swing states. Both candidates are making a last minute push in the Sunshine State to get voters to the polls. Bill Clinton, Michelle Obama, Mitt Romney and President Obama will all be making stops up and down the state this week. The Latino vote is sure to be a determining factor in deciding Florida. But unlike other battleground states like Colorado and Nevada, Florida's predominant groups are Cuban-American and Puerto Rican, not Mexican-American. With the 2000 election in the not so distant past, not to mention incredibly tight polls and talk of a possible electoral college and popular vote split, all eyes are sure to be on Florida.	Marc Caputo	8:00
11/1/12		In 2008, Los Angeles County voters approved Measure R, a half-cent sales tax earmarked to fund light rail transportation and scheduled to expire in 2039. Now, the proponents of Measure J want to extend that tax for another 30 years to accelerate those projects. Business leaders and organized labor see the measure as a way accelerate jobs and the economy as well – if the measure passes, Metro officials say, wheels could hit the ground on about 15 transit projects approximately 15 years ahead of schedule. But there's plenty of opposition: county supervisors Mike Antonovich and Don Knabe have said the continuation of the tax mortgages our future; city councilman Bernard Parks says it strains the budgets of an already struggling population. Various neighborhood groups, from Crenshaw to Boyle Heights, object to the planned transit routes, which would impact low-income areas. And the powerful Bus Riders' Union, which is fighting Measure J has criticized Metro for underserving routes that carry minority riders to and from work. Do you mind the extra half-cent you've been paying in sales tax? Do you support continuing the tax if it means revving up public transportation? 		Americans really do pull together in times of crisis. The Los Angeles Department of Water and Power and Southern California Edison will send crews to the East Coast to help with the recovery effort from Superstorm Sandy. The L.A. City Council passed an emergency motion on Wednesday to allow LADWP workers to help restore power for the millions of residents who still have no electricity more than two days after the storm occurred. SoCal Edison is expected to send a fleet of more than 70 utility trucks and at least 120 personnel to affected areas. Crews who first responded to repair storm-ravaged power systems have been putting in 17-hour days and are in need of the additional support and resources.

11/1/12	DIS	Superstorm Sandy has come and gone, however, its effects are only now being calculated and studied. Dollar estimates in terms of damage are now in the tens of billions. Transportation and utility infrastructures have been ravaged leaving many stranded and in still in the dark. These difficulties are to be expected when it comes to storms and hurricanes. One service that was decimated by the storm which no one saw coming was cell phone carriers. All three major cell phone companies had claimed to be prepared for the storm earlier in the week by topping up fuel for backup generators. Despite whatever steps the companies took, fierce winds downed power lines and flooding destroyed underground network equipment taking out twenty percent of cell tower sites in ten states. This has left millions with no cell reception in the affected areas. With so many people who have and are dependent on their cell phones to communicate with others, this crisis has put many in the region muted. Was this whole situation avoidable? Are the equipment and infrastructure to cell phone companies that fragile and susceptible to damage? What steps can these companies take to avoid these problems in the future?	David Cay Johnston, Chris Guttman-McCabe	15:00:00 AM
11/1/12	POLI	The Los Angeles City Council is one step closer to putting a half-cent sales tax proposal on the March 2013 ballot. Council President Herb Wesson is pushing the tax hike, which he says would help avoid further cuts to city services. Other proposals aimed at raising money for cash-strapped Los Angeles include raising taxes on parking, property and real estate transactions. Wesson says his proposal will raise about $215 million a year for the general fund. That's about how much L.A.'s budget shortfall will be for the next fiscal year. But given the blizzard of tax hike proposals facing voters in November, many of which seem doomed to fail, do Angelenos have the stomach for more tax measures? If not, are there alternatives the council members should be pursuing to address the budget shortfall? BREAKING NEWS AEG and opponents to the proposed Farmers Field project have reached an agreement. The Play Fair at Farmers Field Coalition had launched a lawsuit against the project. That suit has been dismissed. The coalition says its concerns have been resolved and a settlement has been reached.	Alice Walton, Frank Stoltze	10:00
11/1/12	DIV	For most of us as kids, Halloween meant fanning out into the nearby streets to pester our neighbors for candy. But some neighborhoods are more conducive to trick or treating than others – the houses are scarier, the streets are safer, and most importantly – the treats are better quality. So if you're the parent of a little ghost or goblin, what are you to do? Many parents find themselves driving to more family friendly neighborhoods to go trick or treating. And some houses choose to "go dark" rather than supply candy to kids from across town. If you live in one of those areas, do you welcome families from other areas on your street? Do you believe in sharing the Halloween spirit, regardless of geography? Did you pack the family up last night to commute to another neighborhood?		16:00

11/5/12	POLI LAW	The GOP has long held the lion's share of registered voters in Orange County, but, as in all of California, that number is declining. The OC is now 41% red, 31% blue, with the number of unaffiliated voters rising to just over 22%. There are a number of key issues and races for Orange County voters on this year's ballot.  The highly contested Anaheim City Council race has racked up nearly $1 million in campaign expenditures, much of it funded by political action committees representing labor and business interests. Disney alone has reportedly funneled nearly $190,000 to PACs supporting their favored candidates, Steve Chavez Lodge and Jordan Brandman.  Tomorrow will bring to a finish hotly contested races in Anaheim, Costa Mesa and Irvine as well. We'll take a peek behind the Orange polling booth curtain with our OC roundtable journalists. 11/5/12	LAW	The 2000 presidential election between Democrat Al Gore and Republican George W. Bush was too close to call -- literally. The razor-thin margin between them resulted in a lengthy and protracted recount process and a legal challenge that was eventually decided by the Supreme Court in favor of Bush, over a month after the election.  Fast forward to tomorrow, Election Day 2012. With both candidates running a dead heat in many key states, the winner will most likely be by a nose, if that much. Could we be in for another legal battle? That depends on the "margin of litigation" -- the number of outstanding votes, versus the number that separate Barack Obama and Mitt Romney, once the smoke clears and all votes are in.  Campaign lawyers on both sides are determined not to miss a trick; they've deployed an army of eagle-eyed operatives to monitor the polls and send up a flare should there be any hanky-panky. What will they be watching for? Any "acts of sabotage" -- misplaced ballots, misdirected voters, discrimination or other improprieties. But the missteps may not be intentional, either - a state-by-state patchwork of confusing voting laws, coupled with inexperienced poll workers, won't help matters.  Party officials aren't the only ones concerned - the Justice Department has announced that they'll have nearly 800 federal personnel on the watch in 23 states, including here in California in Riverside and Alameda counties. All indications are that this presidential race will be historically close.  Will the winner be decided for good once the polls close on Tuesday? Or will the loser cry foul and	Steve Huefner	13:00
11/5/12	POLI	Tomorrow's election will be among the highest ever in California for campaign spending. This election cycle is without the governor's office at stake and with the presidential race all but wrapped up in the state. Even if you turn off the radio or TV to avoid the chattering class, you can't escape the bumper stickers and yard signs. In the digital era, now Facebook has become the premiere haven for political commentary.  But that doesn't mean individuals are engaging in civilized discourse and enlightening each other's perspectives; instead it seems that people are mainly trumpeting their own opinions or blatantly attacking opposing views. 11/7/12	POLI	It seemed like this day would never come, but the 2012 election cycle has finally reached its end. The debates, the attack ads, the swing state drama, the super-PACs and the four-hour polling lines, all leading up to the moment when we cast our ballots on November 6th .  This presidential campaign has proven to be the closest race in memory – and the longest and most expensive ever, with incumbent Barack Obama and challenger Mitt Romney together spending over $2 billion to win your vote. Last night's election-watch was a state-by-state nailbiter, as first blue, then red, then blue dominated the nation's map. But when the dust settled, Obama emerged victorious and will remain Commander in Chief for four more years. Not only that - the Democrats have once again taken the majority in the Senate, which ensures that the social and economic policies Obama put in place are safe - for now.  What will be the legacy of the next Obama administration? How will Obama address challenges like climate change, the war in Afghanistan, the European debt crisis? Will we be driving over the fiscal cliff or will that crisis be averted? And what's next for the GOP?	Jonathan Wilcox, Matt Rodriguez, Lynn Vavreck, Rick Hasen, Kitty Felde	48:00
11/7/12	POLI	While California didn't figure into the presidential vote as much as Ohio did, we still had an array of important state and local ballot measures to sort through. Voters in California approved Proposition 30, Governor Jerry Brown's initiative to raise sales and income taxes to help balance the state budget, but rejected its rival, Proposition 38, sponsored by Molly Munger.  Other measures that went down in flames include Props 32, which was aimed at preventing the political influence of unions and 37, the labeling of genetically engineered foods initiative. The highly contested Prop 34, which would have replaced the death penalty with life without parole, was defeated by almost 6 points. Success stories? Voters revised the toughest three-strikes law in the country by approving Prop 36.  In L.A. County, a bill requiring adult film stars to wear condoms passed 56% to 44%. Democrats in California have also picked up a supermajority in both houses of the state legislature, an unexpected outcome that gives the party an upper hand over state Republicans. 11/8/12	ECON	The election is over, and President Obama's second term is kicking off with a partisan economic debate that seemed to be put on hold during the campaign: the looming fiscal cliff. The "cliff" refers to the $600 billion in spending cuts and tax hikes set to implement automatically at the end of the year. If the president can't negotiate successfully with the Republican controlled Congress, the measures could set America back into a recession.	Xavier Becerra, Devin Nunes, Brad Sherman	26:00
11/8/12	POLI	The GOP has long held the lion's share of registered voters in Orange County, so it's no surprise that voters there favored Mitt Romney for President. But disappointment came early in the evening as Fox News called Ohio for Obama shortly after 8:00 Tuesday night. Now, the O.C. GOP is licking its wounds and eyeing the future. On the local front, there were a number of key issues and races for Orange County voters on this year's ballot including the highly contested Anaheim City Council race and the Santa Ana Mayor's race. We'll check in with one of our OC roundtable journalists to get the latest results.	Julie Gallego	9:00
11/8/12	LAW	California was the first state to legalize the use of marijuana for medicinal purposes, but Colorado and Washington have become the first states to allow the recreational use of the plant. The two states' newly passed initiatives directly conflict with federal law and may instigate an imminent legal battle with the Obama administration. Federal law prohibits the production, possession and sale of marijuana, which is classified as a Schedule 1 drug - the same category as LSD and heroin. On Wednesday, the Justice Department only said it was reviewing the state initiatives, but otherwise has been unusually quiet on the matter.	Joe Elford, Beau Kilmer	9:00
11/8/12	POLI	Advocates for marriage equality had a lot to celebrate, Tuesday. Voters approved of laws that let same-sex couples marry in Maine and Maryland, and a similar initiative is poised to pass in Washington state. Meanwhile, Minnesota became one of the first states to remove a ban on same-sex marriage from its constitution. That would allow the state legislature to pass a law that would let gay, lesbian, and transgender couples get married, though it's expected to do so anytime soon.  Until this year, voters have typically not supported same-sex marriage, California's Prop 8 in 2008 is evidence of that past perspective. But advocates say Tuesday's gains show strong momentum and a change in public opinion. That in turn could influence the U.S. Supreme Court, which will have to decide in the next few months whether to take up the Prop 8 legal challenge or any of the cases that have called the Defense of Marriage Act unconstitutional.	Scott Barclay, Cliff Rosky	12:00
11/8/12	EDU	Due to steadfast Democratic support, Governor Jerry Brown's Proposition 30 tax increase passed on Election Day. Proposition 30 will raise the sales tax a quarter-cent for four years starting in 2013, and taxes on the wealthy will increase up to 3 percent for the next seven years.  These tax hikes are expected to raise $6 billion annually for California's education system, and that includes K-12 and higher education such as the California State University and the California Community Colleges. Without the passage of Proposition 30, the state budget was expected to call for hundreds of millions of dollars being cut across the board for public schools. 11/9/12	POLI	Political strategists and pundits agree that the Hispanic vote represents a lost opportunity for the Romney campaign. Romney's continued hedging and dodging on the issue of immigration did nothing to endear him to Spanish-speaking voters. But Obama has also been criticized for not doing more; in fact, at a forum sponsored by Univision in September, the president admitted that he saw not passing immigration reform as the biggest failure of his first term. Come Obama 2.0, the immigration question is sure to be front and center. Republican legislators have historically held a hard line against immigration, but are things changing on the Hill? 11/12/12	POLI	Election Day this year didn't just mark the beginning of President Obama's second term, it also marked historic gains for women and continuing gains for minorities in Congress. Women, in a possible retaliation against the "War on Women" narrative which played out this year, got out the vote and came out victorious in numerous races across the country. Elizabeth Warren is now the first female Senator from Massachusetts, and Tammy Baldwin of Wisconsin is the country's first openly lesbian Senator. Although Mr. Obama has held several shorter press events over the last several months, much has transpired since March 6th and reporters are eager to pose their questions about topics like the makeup of his new cabinet, how he plans to steer away from the fiscal cliff, the Benghazi attacks that claimed the lives of four Americans and the developing sex scandal that led to last week's surprise resignation of CIA director David Petraeus. 11/14/12	POLI	The details of former CIA director David Petraeus' affair are coming out, and a steady drip of new information reveals an increasingly expanding, twisted web of relationships. Since Petraeus handed in his resignation, there has been wild speculation from politicians and the media about his decisions and personal life.  Although Petraeus is recognized by both Democrats and Republicans as an incredibly gifted general and a solid CIA director, federal intelligence agencies have cited his affair as a potential security breach and have begun an investigation. Some members of the House and Senate are calling for Petraeus to testify before Congress, while others have suggested that it would be best to drop the issue now that he has resigned. Left-of-center groups have accused city council members of caving to real estate interests by dropping plans for a property sales tax in favor of a hike that disproportionately impacts working class taxpayers. A second and final vote on the sales tax ballot measure is planned for next week.	Alice Walton	12:00

11/15/12	EDU	This week, Brice W. Harris took over stewardship of the California Community Colleges system, replacing retiring chancellor Jack Scott. He has his hands full to shore up a system that, since 2008, has been beset by over $800 million in state funding cuts, classes slashed by 24 percent, and a severe drop in enrollment. But there is hope on the horizon, thanks to the passage of Proposition 30, which will prevent a predicted additional cut of $338 million in funding. Harris has said that he hopes to drill down on the message to California lawmakers that the state needs to continue investing in higher education. Denying our students access to the tools to prepare for better jobs, he warns, is a crisis in the making. How will the new chancellor go about rehabilitating California's community colleges? What challenges lie ahead as they prepare for the next wave of high school graduates and adult learners? Will there be enough classes, funds and opportunities to go around?	Brice Harris	11:00
11/15/12	DIS	In the aftermath of Hurricane Sandy, disaster relief has been a frequent topic of conversation all over the country. Even though a majority of hurricanes, tornadoes, earthquakes, and fires occur in several key points across the country, when disaster strikes, the whole nation feels the impact. Part of this has to do with the way a natural disaster can affect the national economy – economists point to Hurricane Sandy as part of the cause of the most recent increase in the jobless report – but a lot has to do with federal funding for aid. During the presidential campaign, Mitt Romney took a lot of heat for pre-Sandy comments on FEMA: America "can't afford" it. But he's hardly alone in his view that funding to the Federal Emergency Management Agency should be cut back on the federal level. Some economists have argued that FEMA should exist for rare, heavy-hitting natural disaster, while states with high-risk should be responsible for their own, more regular aid. Is the federal government responsible for providing aid for every natural disaster? Is it fair to ask residents of low-risk states to fund a program that predominantly serves states with regular, predictable disasters?	Barry Scanlon, Nicole Gelinas	22:00
11/15/12	LAW	Los Angeles Superior court judge Thomas Rubinson threw out charges related to a first-of-its-kind anti-paparazzi law Wednesday in a case in which a photographer was charged with driving dangerously with intent to capture photos for commercial gain. Assistant City Attorney Ann Rosenthal said hours after the ruling that her office would appeal. Paul Raef, the freelance photographer who is still facing charges of reckless driving and failing to obey a peace officer, was charged after he allegedly pursued pop singer Justin Bieber on July 6 on the 101 freeway. Judge Rubinson cited numerous problems with the anti-paparazzi statute, saying it is unfairly aimed at newsgathering activities protected by the First Amendment. "The judge said that when you are talking about people doing their job and yet running the risk of additional criminal punishment, it has a chilling effect [for] anyone from newsgatherers to wedding photographers and even real estate agents," said David S. Kestenbaum, an attorney representing Raef. The judge put this first case involving California's anti-paparazzi law on hold until the appeal is resolved. Is Judge Rubinson justified in throwing out the charges brought against photographer Paul Raef? Does the anti-paparazzi law go too far?	Stanley Goldman	10:00

11/19/12	LAB	Should the Rose Bowl host 25 events a year? That's an ordinance the Pasadena City Council is considering in a public hearing tonight. If approved, the city would begin the formal process to consider temporarily hosting an NFL team while a permanent stadium is built at Farmers Field.  Many residents complain that a team would attract massive amounts of traffic and rowdy fans to the quiet Arroyo Seco neighborhood, but the Pasadena Chamber of Commerce says the prospect of millions of dollars in public revenue is well worth the inconveniences. 11/19/12	RELI	It wouldn't be Christmas without a nativity scene... lawsuit. After the Santa Monica City Council voted to ban private displays in Palisades Park this year, the nonprofit Santa Monica Nativity Scene Committee, which has been producing elaborate nativity scenes in the park for decades, filed a lawsuit against the city, claiming their right to free speech was being violated.  The city banned nativity scenes and all private displays after atheists and other organizations began inundating the park with displays in recent years. A U.S. District Court judge heard the case today. The churches were hoping the judge would grant an injunction allowing them to mount their displays while the case is being reviewed, but this morning the judge ruled in favor of the city. The group's attorney, William Becker, has indicated they will appeal the decision.  Who should have the right to set up opinionated or religious displays in public spaces? Is the City of Santa Monica obstructing free speech by banning all the displays?	Robert A. Pugsley	8:00

11/19/12	POLI	Last Friday, California Attorney General Kamala Harris released her report "The State of Human Trafficking in California 2012." As a result of California's first anti-trafficking law (AB 22), Harris convened a Human Trafficking Work Group to update the state's first report on the issue from 2007. This year's report compiles Work Group discussions which occurred over a three-day period in Sacramento, San Francisco and Los Angeles, as well as additional research from the California Department of Justice. The report produced some notable data. For instance, from mid-2010 to mid-2012, California identified 1,277 trafficking victims, began 2,552 investigations and put 1,798 individuals under arrest. Some of the numbers, however, seem to conflict with public perception or competing sources of information. The California task force on trafficking found that 72 percent of victims with an identifiable country of origin came from America, even though the common understanding is that victims predominantly come from foreign countries. Also, while sex trafficking amounted for 56% of victims identified by the task force, other sources cite labor trafficking as 3.5 times more prevalent than sex trafficking on the global level.	Kamala Harris	13:00
11/19/12	TECH	The Internet has made it increasingly easy for people to express themselves. Getting online has never been easier – users young and old can update statuses on social networking sites from their smartphones, publish a blog post on Wordpress and promote it all over the web, and get in touch quickly and easily with friends and strangers. The Internet is also an incredibly public platform for expression – sites like Facebook, Twitter, and Tumblr have varying degrees of hard to navigate privacy settings, and users are often left more exposed than they assumed they were. During times when issues like race and sexuality are most discussed, like election season, social media reactions peak, and so does coverage of those reactions. Sites like Buzzfeed and Jezebel have taken heat for going to elaborate lengths with their public exposure and shaming of homophobic and racist posts on Twitter and Facebook. Offensive posts have inspired their own blogs and spin-off social media accounts that aggregate inappropriate material. Is there a line being crossed when it comes to drawing attention to users who post racist or homophobic things online?	Matt Buchanan, Fruzsina Eordogh	18:00
11/19/12	ECON	The saga of Budweiser and Anheuser-Busch is a classic parable of the rise, international domination and eventual disillusionment of the American industrial age. Like most classic American success stories, the chronicle of "The King of Beers" began with an immigrant, in this case, Adolphus Busch, who arrived in St. Louis, Missouri from Germany in 1859 and bought a struggling brewery. Over ensuing generations, the Busch family built an empire by revolutionizing the mass production, distribution and marketing of beer – the world's most popular beverage. Adolphus' son August A. deftly guided Budweiser through Prohibition and established Budweiser as America's first national beer brand. August Jr. bought the St. Louis Cardinals and forged an indelible link between sports and beer that exists to this very day. August III streamlined the company for a new business age and helped launch the profitable light beer craze. But it was August IV's lack of business acumen that led to America's premier beer being bought by foreign investors in 2008, ending a legacy of American dominance in the brewing industry. Renowned journalist William Knoedelseder documents the 149-year saga of the business of Budweiser – as well as the trappings, tragedy and drama of a family blessed and cursed by untold wealth in his new book, "Bitter Brew: The Rise and Fall of Anheuser-Busch and America's Kings of Beer."	William Knoedelseder	17:00

Now you can find out what goes on behind the scenes of the hospitality industry from a new confessional "Heads in Beds: A Reckless Memoir of Hotels, Hustles, and So-Called Hospitality" written by veteran luxury hotel employee Jacob Tomsky.  As a hotel insider, Tomsky was privy to the industry secrets and tricks exploited by bellhops, valet attendants and housekeepers for years and he's not shy about revealing them to readers. In addition to workplace antics, the author offers advice to travelers about how to navigate the sometimes-intimidating world of industrial luxury hospitality including who, how, and when to tip.  Tomsky explains how working at hotels has impacted his personal life as well as all there is to know about what really goes into profiting from putting heads in beds.	Jacob Tomsky

11/22/12	ECON	If you've ever stumbled out of a bar on Hollywood Boulevard at closing time, you know the smell: Bacon wrapped hot dogs. They're very tasty, but are they legal?  Right now, street vendors can be fined up to $1,000 and face jail time for selling food on L.A. sidewalks. The carts are generally operated by immigrant vendors who make a living selling quick late-night snacks to concert, club and bar-goers.  Los Angeles County's Street Vending Compliance Program does require vendors to pay fees and get public health permits, but they are still not permitted to prepare or sell the food on sidewalks. With the help of City Councilman Jose Huizar, street vendors in Boyle Heights recently came to an agreement with the city to be allowed to sell food at the Boyle Heights Farmers Market once a week.  The East Los Angeles Community Corporation (ELACC) in Boyle Heights is organizing a series of forums and working with community members to try and garner support for the legalization of street vendors. 11/22/12	YOUT	Move over Breakfast Club kids, the "in crowd" still rules the world. This, according to new research that finds that popular high school students earn more than their freaks and geeks counterparts decades after graduation. Researchers crunched data from the Wisconsin Longitudinal Study, a survey of over 10,000 men and women who graduated from Wisconsin high school in 1957.  Back in 1957, the students were asked to list three people they considered to be their best friends. Those students, whose names were written down the most, were deemed the most popular. Decades later, the researchers have followed up with them to see what they could learn about the impact of popularity then and now. Turns out, those popular kids were more likely to have come from "warm family environments," to have been smarter than their peers and to have been somewhat more affluent.  Today, those same people are earning two percent more than their peers. Does this mean that our dearly-held Revenge of the Nerds fantasies are just that – fantasies? Is there anything the rest of us can do to buck this trend?	Sarah Kliff	8:00

		In 2004, Sal Khan was a successful hedge fund manager in Boston who had started remotely tutoring his young cousin in New Orleans when the “aha” moment occurred. What started with his young protégé’s need for a little help with her math homework has exploded into called the Khan Academy, now the world’s most popular online learning website with five million unique visitors a month, a million page views a day and over 650 million exercises completed. Khan’s approach to education is based on the idea that the existing model we use to teach humans is hopelessly archaic, and may never have been effective in the first place. In his new book, “The One World Schoolhouse,” Khan does far more than criticize the existing education paradigm; he offers specific and radical ideas to push the way we teach, and the way we learn into the 21st century. A cornerstone of Khan’s approach is the use of technology to humanize the learning process and provide free access to education through the use of online videos and software. Khan also believes that this new approach can address existing problems in education like low teacher pay and job satisfaction and the lack of access to quality education for children and adults alike.

11/23/12	FOR	Yesterday, Mohammed Morsi of Egypt made vast expansions to the power and scope of the presidency. Through a series of constitutional amendments, President Morsi vaulted himself above and beyond the reproach of Egypt’s legislative and judicial branches of government. Critics are calling him out for barring any of his decisions from appeal in court, as well as providing shelter to the panel drafting Egypt’s new constitution, which is dominated by Muslims. This concerns liberals and Christians in Egypt, who foresee the new constitution as demeaning to women, indifferent to other religions and greatly limiting to personal freedoms. Beyond those changes, Morsi also ordered a retrial for former President Hosni Mubarak, mostly as a symbolic gesture towards citizens who are still frustrated with the lack of punishment for the government’s role in the death of protesters. However, Morsi has not made any new efforts to bring punishment to the members of the Egyptian police force who directly killed protesters. This upsets the average Egyptian, but it guarantees that the new leader will have the loyalty of his primary law enforcement agency. All of this comes on the heels of Morsi brokering the peace talks between Israel and Hamas to bring an end to the recent conflict in Gaza, which earned him high praise from President Barack Obama and Secretary Hillary Clinton.	Sherine Tadros, Father Gregory Bishay, Dr. Maher Hathout	18:00
11/23/12	ECON	If you’re one of those people who finds mannequins creepy, well, you might want to start cutting down on your shopping. That’s because some retailers, particularly luxury fashion brands, are starting to use mannequins equipped with cameras in their stores. The mannequins look normal (or as normal as a mannequin can appear, at least), but have a camera located in one of their eyes which draws upon technology currently used at airports to identify criminals. The mannequins can thus determine the race, age and ethnicity of shoppers, and that information would then be used by companies to better tailor their in-store experiences to customers. The dummies are already being used in Europe and America and seem to be paying off, but some retailers are taking a stand against the specialized mannequins. Nordstrom, citing customer boundaries, refuses to install such technology in its stores, although they have set up WiFi and introduced iPads for shopping engagement. Where is the line exactly on this issue? Would you shop at a location if you thought a mannequin was watching? What’s the difference between this and a security camera? How are the issues of privacy	Max Catanese	13:00

Shackleton failed, but as others have noted, his failure became his strength. Shackleton did what no other explorer did: he brought all of his men back alive from unbelievable hardship: the loss of their ship; months on shifting, perilous ice; a boat trip to inhospitable Elephant Island; an 800-mile sail to a pinpoint of land; rescue before the ice set in again. 11/26/12	LAW	This week, the U.S. Supreme Court will evaluate workplace harassment in the context of supervision and determine who qualifies as a supervisor. The specific case before the court began with Maetta Vance, who was allegedly racially targeted by one of her immediate "supervisors," Sandra Davis. The question of supervision is an important one because it frequently determines liability. In cases where an employee is harassed by a supervisor, the employer is automatically responsible for damages, while if the perpetrator is a co-worker, the victim has to prove that the employer was negligent in following up on complaints. What makes someone a supervisor? Is it, as the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission states, anyone with the authority to manage daily work activities? Is it someone with hiring and firing power? Should employers be responsible for all workplace harassment, or just that carried out by their management?	Greg Stohr, Anne K. Richardson	22:00
11/26/12	EDU	As students across LA head back to school from their Thanksgiving break, LAUSD's John Deasy will head back to his office with a lot of decisions to make after Proposition 30 passed on the November ballot. With the state receiving an additional $6 billion in revenue, LAUSD has voted to restore its classroom calendar to the standard 180 days for the first time in five years of budget cutting, which Deasy publicly supported. The district will also rescind 10 furlough days teachers had agreed to, and will talk to other, much smaller employee unions about rescinding their furlough days. The LAUSD school board also voted to keep John Deasy in his role as superintendent through 2015. The LAUSD is also applying for high profile "Race to the Top" grants that the federal government will distribute, but the LA teachers' union is opposed to the grant on the grounds that it could overextend the district financially.	John Deasy	20:00
11/26/12	HIST	It's the stuff of wartime spy thrillers like "Casablanca" and "The 39 Steps" — the body of a secret agent is found under mysterious circumstances, with a coded message that defies cracking by experts. This courier was no stool pigeon ... but it was a pigeon, one of some 250,000 enlisted during World War II by the U.K.'s National Pigeon Service to carry messages from behind enemy lines in Germany, France and elsewhere. Around 30 of the brave birds were awarded the Dickin Medal for Bravery in Battle, the animal equivalent of the Victoria Cross. 11/26/12	TECH	The Electronic Communications Privacy Act (ECPA) was a statute enacted in 1986 as a means to set privacy parameters on new and growing technologies. As one might imagine, any phone, computer or other device from 1986 would be woefully out-of-date in today's society. Some politicians and many technological experts feel the same way about the ECPA itself. Senate Judiciary Committee Chair Patrick Leahy (D-VT), has taken it upon himself to tackle this issue, and has drafted an amended version of the ECPA. Leahy's version specifically alters the rules of access law enforcement agencies have over private e-mail accounts, requiring them to obtain a court-approved warrant as opposed to an administrative subpoena. Unsurprisingly, groups such as the National Sheriffs' Association, the National District Attorneys' Association and the U.S. Department of Justice voiced their displeasure of Leahy's changes. After this, tech website CNET made a report that Leahy again altered the bill, allowing for searches without a warrant. With an air of confusion now surrounding Leahy's proposal and stark opponents on both sides of the issue, it is clearer than ever than some substantial changes must be made to bring this old law kicking and screaming into the 21st century.	Declan McCullagh, Joseph Cassily	13:00
11/26/12	LAW	The Santa Clarita Valley school district has implemented a drug testing program in their junior and senior high schools. The program allows parents to opt their child in for random, free, on-campus drug tests. So far, more than 2,000 students participate, about one tenth of the districts middle and high school students – and the program administrators are looking to expand. While random drug testing for student athletes and participants in certain extra-curricular activities is not uncommon, Santa Clarita's Comprehensive Alcohol and Drug Reduction and Education (CADRE) program is believed to be the only one of its kind in the U.S. The ACLU and other civil rights activists are skeptical though, questioning how it could be truly voluntary, and whether the program violates children's privacy rights. If a student were to refuse testing, even with their parent's consent, the district could face legal challenges. Should students be subjected to drug-testing programs their parents opt into? Do programs like CADRE violate children's privacy rights? Is random drug testing the best way to prevent drug use in teens?	Gail Pinsker, Adam Wolf	17:00
11/26/12	ENT	Alan Eisenstock's "Raiders! The Story of the Greatest Fan Film Ever Made" follows how two kids, 12-year-old Eric Zala and 11-year-old Chris Strompolos, from Ocean Springs, Mississippi decided to remake the Indiana Jones film 'Raiders of the Lost Ark.' Over the next seven years, the two made a complete remake of the movie, with every scene and every stunt. The final product was considered an undisputed fan film masterpiece. The story of how the movie was made serves as a backdrop for Eisenstock, who chronicles the maturation of Zala and Strompolos during the movie's making: how the two kids grew up and dealt with their own respective hardships, and how their boyhood friendship eventually dissolved. The film was the center of their youth, but it was also the biggest, and eventually unbearable, burden on their friendship. From their devotion to their film, to their ruined friendship, to the eventual redemption of their relationship and current directing cooperation, Eisenstock writes of youth, maturation, and the boundless energy and hope contained in a young person's dream.	Alan Eisenstock, Eric Zala, Chris Strompolos	17:00

11/27/12	POLI	With each passing day, the pressure increases on Capitol Hill politicians to reach a compromise on the budget. If they neglect to do so before the December 31, 2012 deadline, then 2013 will kick off with a host of undesirable economic factors. Workers would see their payroll taxes increase, businesses would see tax deductions go out the window, and the Bush tax cuts would expire without being replaced. Furthermore, spending cuts would go into effect that would deeply slash Medicare and the Pentagon's defense budget. Without a new budget deal, most economists predict that the country would suffer financially, with the stock market taking a massive hit as investors start to panic about the economy. After President Obama's reelection, he announced that he was given a mandate by voters to increase taxes on the wealthy as a means to deal with the budget. As Republicans also failed to secure the Senate majority, it appears as if they are now inclined to budge on some of their previous steadfast positions. However, Democrats could be poised to push hard on cutting defense and raising taxes in lieu of making any changes to entitlement programs. Which side will	Aaron Blake, Paul West	22:00

The doctors recommend that teens should have a prescription for emergency contraceptives, such as the well-known Plan B brand, before they start having sex. Currently, the pills are available over the counter for people over 17 – the AAP suggests that if younger teens had access to 'Plan B,' there would be fewer unplanned pregnancies. The rate of teen pregnancy has fallen significantly during the past 20 years, but the U.S. still has the highest number in the developed world. Emergency contraceptives can prevent pregnancy after unprotected sex, or when a condom breaks, but they are most effective when taken within 24 hours. The AAP suggests that if the 'morning after' pills were available to teens, they could be used quickly and effectively, without the logistical hang-ups of a last minute prescription. Opponents of the plan say that providing access to Plan B encourages teen sexual activity, doesn't reduce pregnancy rates and ignores other negative consequences, such as sexually transmitted diseases. Should teens have access to emergency contraceptives? How should doctors approach sexual activity and sex education with young patients? Would easier access to birth control and emergency	Anita L. Nelson, M.D., Donna J. Harrison, M.D.	25:00
11/27/12	ECON	As U.S. businesses felt the pinch of the recession, downsizing or even closing their doors, many American workers found themselves applying for unemployment benefits. But as temporary layoffs stretched from weeks into months, the ranks of the unemployed swelled, straining the limits of state-funded assistance. This prompted the federal government in 2008 to step in to staunch the bleeding with temporary emergency extensions of up to 73 additional weeks. In California, which provides 26 weeks of state assistance, that meant a maximum total of 99 weeks. Some economists say that the extra benefits have contributed to a down economy by keeping people from taking available jobs. But for many of the over 2 million Americans currently relying on federal unemployment extensions, it's their only hope for staying afloat as they continue to search for work. Now, even those extra payments have been exhausted by well over 900,000 Californians. And if congress doesn't act to extend the federal lifeline, 400,000 more will see an abrupt end to their benefits on December 29th, even if they haven't exhausted the current federal maximum. The job outlook has improved slightly, but millions are still looking. With so many breadwinners dependent on the federal program, how will the cutoff affect California's economy? Has the federal	Jordan Levine, Liz Pulliam Weston	24:00

11/27/12	HEAL	Baseball writers of America will have some tough choices this January, when two of the game's most accomplished and polarizing figures become eligible for entry to the Baseball Hall of Fame. Both Barry Bonds and Roger Clemens should be obvious inductees when you look at the numbers, but the disproven allegations that both lied about using performance enhancing drugs (PED) have still left many questioning whether they belong in Cooperstown. Bonds, who set the all-time home run record, was cleared of charges last year that he lied to a grand jury about not knowingly taking PED's. Seven-time Cy Young winner and MVP, Roger Clemens was acquitted this past summer of perjuring himself while testifying in front of Congress about not taking steroids. But even the acquittals have left many unconvinced. While some insist that any involvement with steroids should be an automatic disqualification from hall of fame consideration, others believe it would be a disservice to the game of baseball and to Cooperstown to not acknowledge the steroid era. They argue that ignoring players involved in steroid use is ignoring a part of baseball's history, however ugly.	Bill Shaikin	8:00

Maybe you're one of those dashing off to the corner liquor store for a ticket, or setting up an uneasy alliance with co-workers to increase your chances. 11/28/12	HIST	"The Fiddler on Pantico Run" is author Joe Mozingo's quest to discover the origins of his father's family, and the shocking discoveries he made along the way. After initially believing that Mozingo was a French or Basque name, a college professor suggested that it was most likely of African origins. This came as a shock to the blue eyed, very Caucasian Mozingo, but spawned a search for his family's origins. Eventually, Mozingo was able to trace his ancestry back to Edward Mozingo, an African slave brought to Jamestown in 1644, who eventually earned his freedom and married a white woman. The discovery of Edward Mozingo, however, is only the beginning of the family history laid out in The Fiddler on Pantico Run. Joe Mozingo searches for Edward's roots in Africa, but also traces how the family evolved in America from Edward's initial mixed race marriage. Mozingo meets distant relatives all over the country, some white, some black, some somewhere in between, all with distinct family histories.	Joe Mozingo	12:00

12/4/12	DIV	Homophobia or no homophobia? That is the question currently being debated among journalists after the Associated Press recommended against the use of "phobia" in "political and social context." AP editors say the suffix, in cases such as "homophobia," or Islamophobia," can be presumptuous because it ascribes mental disability to someone who may or may not have one.  The AP is opting for something that it sees as more neutral, such as "anti-gay," to describe a comment or action, but avoid attributing a motive. The National Lesbian and Gay Journalists Association agrees, opting for something like "LGBT rights opponents."  Do you agree or disagree? What do you think might be a better alternative? Or do you think such actions should be labeled in the traditional way?	James Rainey	17:00

12/4/12	LAW	The water cycle is pretty simple - rainfall flows down mountains in streams and rivers, through cities in pipes and culverts, to end up in the ocean. But the Los Angeles water story is more complicated than that. L.A.'s water comes from nine watersheds, flowing through miles of interconnected pipes, channels and drains to the ocean.  Along the way it picks up pollution, channeled into the waterways from storm drains, sewers and along the concrete-lined L.A. river. By the time it reaches the sea it's a fetid soup of bacterial, metal, oils and human and animal waste. So who's responsible for the cleanup? The county, who manages the storm sewer system through the flood control district? The more than 80 individual cities, each with their own flood control system that contributes to the overall mess?	Mark Pestrella, Steve Fleischli	17:00
12/4/12	LAW	A federal appeals court in New York overturned the conviction of a man accused of selling drugs for off-label purposes. In a 2-1 ruling on Monday, the judges ruled that a law banning the sale of drugs for purposes not approved by the FDA violates free speech.  Doctors frequently and legally prescribe drugs for off-label effects. Drug companies, however, are bound by the Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, which gives the FDA power of regulation – the sale of a drug for off-label uses is prohibited. Misbranding regulations have long plagued pharmaceutical companies, many of which pay millions, or even billions of dollars in fines for marketing their product for unapproved purposes.  Is pharmaceutical marketing a free speech issue? Who benefits most from this ruling, drug companies, or consumers? How much power should the FDA have over pharmaceutical marketing? Who should decide what a drug is for: the manufacturer, or the government? Have you ever taken a prescription drug for an off-label purpose?	Scott Gottlieb, Allison Zieve	21:00

12/6/12	MEDI	Though many Facebookers may not have known it, the social networking site's users have been partially in control of changes and additions to the policy and privacy. Users have had the option to vote on governing policy since 2009, but now, the company is on track to take back control, with proposed new documents that would disallow the user voting process. One final vote will determine whether this new policy goes into effect – the catch is that, to prevent changes, the vote must reach 30% of Facebook users – about 300 million people. Considering past votes, it's unlikely that users will do much to sway this decision. The most recent Facebook policy vote reached only about 380,000 users. The current vote to save voting rights has already surpassed that with over 400,000 votes and counting, but will users be able to reach the minimum in time to prevent change? Facebook gave users one week, from December 3rd to the 10th, to cast their votes. Should users be allowed to vote on Facebook governing policy? If this vote is unsuccessful, do you trust Facebook with your privacy and content? Would you leave the site over these changes, or are they relatively	Will Oremus	8:00
12/6/12	LIT	In order to understand a dynasty, one must sometimes go back to the beginning. That is what historian David Nasaw does successfully in his latest book, looking at the remarkable yet turbulent life of Joseph P. Kennedy. Nasaw is best known for penning biographies on captains of industry Andrew Carnegie and William Randolph Hearst. In "The Patriarch," he was given unlimited access to the Joseph Kennedy papers at the John F. Kennedy Library and to the Kennedy family. In this unprecedented biography, Nasaw delves deep into the many careers and ultra ambitious life of the Kennedy patriarch. The book chronicles Joseph Kennedy's path from his beginnings in East Boston, to becoming one of the wealthiest and most powerful Americans in the twentieth century, to his final years, enduring the pain and suffering that comes with great tragedies.	David Nasaw	17:00
12/6/12	FOR	Conflict in Syria is escalating, with rumors circulating about the Assad regime's possession of chemical weapons driving international diplomacy talks and intervention. Unnamed American officials stated that the Syrian military has loaded the chemicals for sarin, a deadly nerve gas, into aerial bombs, ready to be deployed at Assad's orders. Members of Assad's regime have rebuffed the reports, insisting that they would never use such weapons against Syrians and claiming that chemical warfare is being used as an excuse for international intervention. A video allegedly shows the Syrian military using white phosphorous gas, which is legal if being used to light the sky at night, but illegal when used as a weapon. President Obama has warned against the use of chemical weapons against the rebels, citing unspecified consequences. Secretary of State Clinton is discussing the crisis with her Russian counterpart, in hopes of a breakthrough that could preempt excessive violence. There have been reports of rebel advancements, but Assad's regime has so far denied their validity.	Joshua Landis, Mark Jacobson	13:00

In many ways, the two men embody some of L.A.'s most distinguishing qualities – where would the city be without its electric cars and plenty of space to park them. So, who is the savvier businessman, Musk, or McCourt? Is there someone else in L.A. business who should be considered for the top spot?	Matt DeBord	17:00

12/6/12	ART	Tony Award-nominated play "Other Desert Cities," by Jon Robin Baitz, opens December 9th and is showing at the Mark Taper Forum until January 6, 2013. The Center Theatre Group's production stars Jeannie Berlin, Robert Foxworth, Robin Weigert, Michael Weston, and JoBeth Williams as a SoCal family spending the holidays together in Palm Springs.  Tensions run high for this family of Hollywood politicians, especially after black-sheep daughter Brooke announces the imminent publication of her memoir, which is focused on the most tumultuous time in the Wyeth's past. Subtle and resonant, Baitz's play is perfect for the holiday season in Southern California. Baitz joins Larry in-studio to talk about writing, politics and Christmas in the desert. As the movie tells it, based on real events, soldiers on opposite sides in World War One laid down their guns for a few hours to celebrate Christmas in the No Man's Land between the trenches. The movie also tells what happened to them afterward, when they had to face the consequences of being soldiers following their human instincts instead of soldiers following orders. 12/18/12	MEDI	In the days since the tragic shooting at Sandy Hook Elementary School in Newtown, Connecticut that took the lives of 20 children and 6 adults, media outlets have given the story nearly wall-to-wall coverage. However, not all media coverage is created equal. Early on, there were mistakes in the reports which misidentified the shooter and incorrectly painted his mother as a teacher at the elementary school. This is not uncharacteristic of early coverage in the wake of a story of this magnitude.	Craig Curtis, David Folkenflik	24:00
12/18/12	POLI	With Rice bowing out of the running for Secretary of State, who will succeed Clinton? Last week, U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Susan Rice officially withdrew her name from consideration for Secretary of State. Once her name began to be floated, Republicans in Congress threw up strong opposition, questioning her leadership skills in the aftermath of the 9/11 attacks in Libya. In her withdrawal letter to the President, Rice said she had become "convinced that the confirmation process would be lengthy, disruptive and costly," and an unwelcome national distraction.  Massachusetts Senator and former Presidential candidate John Kerry has long been considered a frontrunner to succeed Hillary Clinton as Secretary of State, and would likely meet with GOP approval. He'd have big shoes to fill - the list of illustrious past holders of the title goes back to John Jay, and includes Henry Kissinger, William Jennings Bryan, Madeleine Albright and Thomas Jefferson.  The position of Secretary of State requires expertise in international affairs, experience with diplomacy and an effective working relationship with the Commander-in-Chief; many agree that Clinton has done an admirable job during challenging times. 12/27/12	ECON	With only five days to go before 'Cliffageddon,' President Barack Obama cut his holiday short and flew back to the capitol to try to broker a deal. But Republicans and Democrats in congress seem to be as far apart as ever.  Last week, House speaker John Boehner handed the ball off to the Senate, admitting he didn't have the GOP votes to pass his 'Plan B' proposal. Christmas came and went, with the Capitol deserted and no viable solution in sight. House members are still in their districts, waiting to be summoned back to D.C. for their input - but the call hasn't come. What happens if and when we go over the cliff? Taxpayers face an increase across all income levels; the long-term unemployed will see an abrupt end to their federal unemployment benefits; spending cuts will kick in, putting federal programs, national defense and jobs on the chopping block.  Why are both sides willing to risk financial disaster? Who's really holding up the negotiations? Can any middle ground be found here? Will agreement be reached before the Times Square ball drops on December 31st?	Tom McClintock, Xavier Becerra	13:00
12/27/12	SPOR	Everyone in Los Angeles was excited to see a new ownership team take over the Dodgers in 2012, so looking forward to 2013, all eyes are on the NFL. L.A. has been without a football team since the Raiders moved back to Oakland in 1995. The L.A. region has made numerous moves to bring the NFL back to town.  This year, the City Council approved a deal with Anschutz Entertainment Group (AEG) to build the proposed Farmers Field in downtown L.A., while billionaire Ed Roski's proposal to build the stadium in the City of Industry remained "shovel ready." Pasadena changed a city ordinance to offer a temporary residence to an NFL team at the Rose Bowl. Now AEG is up for sale, and there's still a key ingredient missing here: an NFL team.  Hopefully, 2013 will be the year we find out which NFL team wants to go Hollywood. Teams can apply to make that move on January 1, 2013. Has the NFL been missed in Los Angeles? Are the USC and UCLA programs enough to quench our thirst for football? Do you have environmental concerns with the new $315 million 76,00-seat downtown stadium? 12/27/12	GEND	Having trouble finding a date for New Year's? Could your credit score be the problem? That's the lament (or triumph) of some singles on the prowl, who say a bad credit score is increasingly seen as a dating deal breaker. One financial analyst says credit scores are the new dating equivalent of a sexually transmitted disease test. The credit score is derived from a formula that accounts for outstanding debt and payment histories and in recent years it's become increasingly ubiquitous. It's now used to determine credit, housing loan approval, and in 42 states, it can even be considered as part of a job applicant's file. The trend has spawned websites such as creditscoredating.com and datemycreditscore.com. Some joke about it, but financial planners say it's serious. A partner with a bad credit score can prevent a couple from buying a home, drive up rent for an apartment application, or make the difference between high or low cell phone bills or car insurance rates. Do you consider your date's credit score when dating?	Karen Blumenthal	17:00
12/27/12	LAW	The Journal News, a newspaper based in White Plains, NY, attracted attention recently for its online publication of the names and addresses of people with permits to own guns living in Westchester and Rockland counties. The interactive map pinpoints homes where one or more residents are licensed to own a handgun – a pistol or revolver. The map doesn't track ownership of long guns, like shotguns and rifles, and only marks homes where someone is licensed to own a gun – they may not actually own a gun, and there is no way to track unlicensed gun owners. The story received a lot of criticism, with many people calling the map an extreme violation of privacy, and some comparing the list to a sex offender registry. Critics also worry that the information makes residents more vulnerable, although they debate whether those with or without guns are in more danger. One blogger retaliated by publishing the names, addresses and home phone numbers of the Journal News' staff. By New York state law, gun permit records are public information – the Journal News used technology to aggregate the records on a convenient Google map and publish them widely. Should gun permit information be readily accessible? Is the map useful even if it can't track unlicensed		13:00
12/27/12	HIST	While it's nice to look at who came out on top at the end of the year, it's also worthwhile to remember the losers. Besides, we learn from our mistakes right? (Or at least learn to laugh at them.) From pop culture to entertainment to politics, nothing is off limits. Take your pick: General Petraeus's sex scandal, or the box office disaster that was "The Oogieloves." And don't forget Rupert Sanders, after having an affair with Kristen Stewart, or Rupert Murdoch, who has been deemed unfit to rule his media empire. The list goes on and on. Who do you think ended 2012 with egg on his or her face? What companies came out with products that just didn't cut it for you...or anyone? Which politicians lost their dignity along with the vote this year? Give us a call and let us know your "favorite" failure or flop of 2012.	Mary McNamara	18:00
12/27/12	SCI	Sci-fi fans, a planet similar to Earth may be closer than we could have ever imagined. An international team of scientists has determined that Tau Ceti, the star that is most similar to our Sun and closest to the Earth, may have a habitable planet in its orbit. The planet, which is five times the size of Earth, lies in Tau Ceti's "habitable zone." That means that the distance of the planet from the star allows for temperatures to be at a level which would allow for life like we see on Earth. Of course, that doesn't take into account for the increased gravity. This system is 12 light years away, which in the grand scheme of things is equivalent to a few blocks in the city which is the Universe. While those jumping ahead may wish to see this as a potential outpost for colonization, scientists are expected to use this discovery as a way of perfecting planetary detection in the future. What else is on the horizon out there? What is the likelihood that this new planet has life on it? How did the scientists find it in the first place?	Charles Beichman	17:00

12/31/12	MEDI	After four tumultuous years, it looks like the Tribune Company is finally out of the financial woods. The media conglomerate emerged from Chapter 11 bankruptcy today and is said to be a leaner, cleaner, more financially sound version of its former self, having shaken off around $12 billion of its nearly $13 billion total debt. Tribune currently owns 23 television stations, eight daily newspapers and a number of digital media outlets. But with a new board of directors made up mostly of Hollywood entertainment executives, Tribune will probably be looking to shed its newspaper holdings, which have been less than profitable as readership and ad revenue has slowed in major markets.  The Los Angeles Times has long been rumored to be up for sale; among the suitors expressing interest are Rupert Murdoch, owner of News Corp., and the owners of the Orange County Register and the San Diego Union Tribune. And closer to home, venture capitalist Austin Beutner has hinted at forming an investment group to buy the paper. The Los Angeles Times has undergone several rounds of layoffs in the past few years.  Could a new owner turn things around? Will dismantling the behemoth Tribune company and returning hometown ownership to its struggling dailies improve their outlook? Does print media have a future? Do you want Washington to solve problems rather than cause problems? Do you have a resolution or two for your beloved sports team? If you could recommend resolutions for just about anyone or anything to make 2013 a golden year, what would be top of the list?		18:00

12/31/12	LAW	As the holidays wind down in America, some family members may find themselves relieved to escape the presence of their parents. Here in the United States, and other Western countries, we are free to engage with our parents as much or as little as we want. However, a recently amended law in China does not grant its citizens such leeway. Elderly Chinese parents are now legally allowed to sue their own children if they don't come to visit them. This is another obstacle in the country's challenge to care for its elderly, as economic reforms have splintered the traditional family unit. There is a severe lack of alternatives such as retirement homes or care facilities, and thus some parents become neglected, abused or even exploited in their old age. Across the board, it appears as if Chinese citizens have become suspicious of its elderly sect. There have been a string of incidents over the past few years in which elderly people have fallen and injured themselves, and then went on to blame and sue the good Samaritans which stopped to help them.	Dr. Laura Mosqueda M.D.	23:00
12/31/12	HIST	It might have been one small step for man, but Neil Armstrong's historic quote is causing a giant stir over forty years after the fact. That's because in a recent documentary for the BBC, Armstrong's brother reveals that the phrase, which the astronaut always claimed was improvised, was actually prepared days in advance. In fact, Dean Armstrong says his brother slipped him a written note with his first draft during a game of Risk. This is an added layer to the aspect that the quote, according to its originator, was intended to be, "One small step for a man," but the "a" was lost in the transmission. So, why all this attention paid to a short, simple phrase? Is it just because it was said on the Moon? Or because of the historic importance of the moment itself? What's your take on this?	Christopher Riley	9:00
12/31/12	LAW	Invoking suspension of disbelief allows us to enjoy superhero and supervillain sagas without worrying about whether or not these fictional characters are liable for the legal repercussions of their actions; however, what if Lex Luthor could sue Superman for assault? Would Superman be held accountable and be forced to retain legal representation? Authors James Daily and Ryan Davidson closely explore the legal reality of super fiction in their new book, "The Law of Superheroes." The book simultaneously serves as an analysis of basic legal theory and an entertaining exploration of the fictional world of comic book characters. Daily and Davidson explain that some comic books do attempt to incorporate legal realism. For example, in the DC comic universe, there is a fictitious Twelfth Amendment, which allows masked superheroes to legally avoid revealing their secret identities. Listen in as authors James Daily and Ryan Davidson put the modern legal system to the superhero test.	James Daily, Ryan Davidson	17:00
